Monthly Update & Performance Summary

Conservative Model

October 2022

MARKET SUMMARY

The month of October was an interesting month across financial markets, with a wide range of factors impacting markets, both domestically and globally.

Locally the RBA signaled strongly a shift to 0.25% moves, rather than the 0.50% increases we've had to so far, one of the first central banks to shift to smaller increments. This led to a strong monthly return for government bonds, a welcome change and a sign of the improving outlook for bonds.

In addition, the shift to a steadier rate rise cycle drove the local equity market higher, up 6%. It also drove down the Australian dollar. Unhedged global equities rallied 8%, despite some nervousness around the global economy.

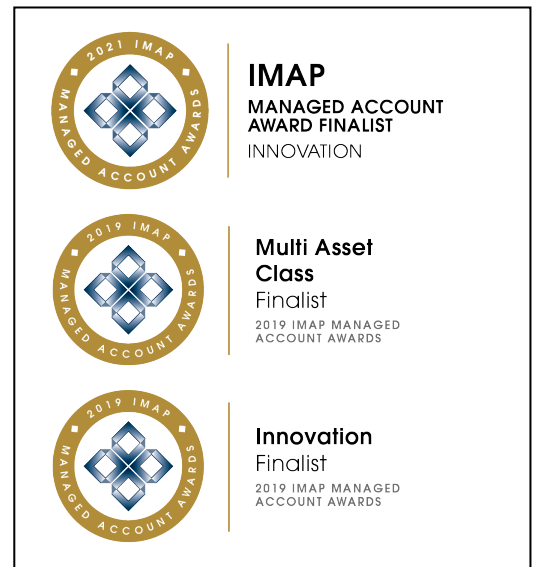

Within the Australian Equities market, financials and discretionary stocks performed strongly while metals & mining experienced some struggles through the month, as the China macroeconomic data continued to disappoint.

Looking ahead, we see some short-term headwinds particularly in global equities, as the Fed seeks to tackle persistent inflation with rate rises. We do however believe we are closer to the bottom of this bear cycle sell-off and are looking for opportunities to top up growth exposure in portfolios once the market has digested the risks to the global economy from excessive Fed tightening.

Portfolio Returns

October was one of the best single months ever for the SMA's, with all risk levels outperforming strongly, driven by both asset allocation and asset selection. Conservative SMA's returned +4.2% over the month, with higher risk levels generating greater returns, for example High Growth returned +6.9%.

In terms of return breakdown, the Australian Equities sleeve within the SMA's outperformed the ASX200 index by +1.3% to return +7.3% overall. The overweight to Australian bonds made at the last rebalance also paid off handsomely, as the asset class returned +1.2% more than any other defensive asset.
